

Photos show Tanzania Revenue Authority officials watching as goods including cooking oil, soap, sugar, margarine and kerosene impounded from traders at Kwa Husein are loaded into a TRA vehicle. The goods are bought across the Tanzanian border in Taveta, Kenya, and transported over the Holili border post for sale in Kilimanjaro and Arusha regions. In the second photo women traders whose merchandise have been impounded ponder their next move. Regional integration analysts question what the East Africa Community free movement of goods is all about if women with small investments are denied the opportunity to trade freely. What are the limits to what activities taxes must be paid for? they query. (Photo: Nick Oyoo of Utafiti News Features)
